FORT MYERS, FLORIDA

This is Lee County on Florida's southwest coast, where the Caloosahatchee River meets the Gulf of Mexico . . . a golden land of better living.

THE LAND OF OPPORTUNITY AND GOOD LIVING

Lee County, located in the sub-tropical area of Florida's Gulf Coast, bordered by the Gulf of Mexico and almost surrounded by the waters of San Carlos Bay, Charlotte Harbor, the Caloosahatchee River, and other waters, has an air-conditioned climate that is not only ideal for year round living but is particularly adapted to agricultural undertakings.

This county offers all types of soil to fit all kinds of agriculture and horticulture. There are areas particularly suited to citrus growing. Other sections are particularly good for truck farming and for gladiolus cultivation, which is of great importance here. Other parts of the county have attracted livestock breeders who find great opportunities in the cattle business in this land where forage is green al the year round.

Fort Myers, the county seat of Lee County, offers many opportunities in business and industry. This is the chief trading center of a large area of Southwest Florida, and provides outstanding advantages for distributors and retailers, and also affords opportunities for specialized manufacturing.

Fort Myers has always been a good commercial fishing center, and in recent years it has also become the center of a considerable shrimp fishing industry.

Farm lands in Lee County are still available at very attractive prices, and industrial and business sites are likewise plentiful in Fort Myers and the other communities of the county. Taxes, transportation, labor conditions, living conditions, and other factors necessary to successful industry or commerce are highly favorable.
